Admiral Stansfield Turner
 Director
 Central Intelligence Agency
 Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Admiral Turner:

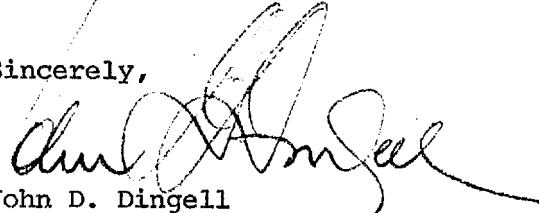

One of the serious but little discussed implications of the current energy situation which we and the rest of the world find ourselves in is that at the point at which global petroleum supplies begin to be inadequate to meet demand, serious disturbances are likely to occur. Your report on this subject, which you discussed last month with this Subcommittee, is very much to the point.

I am concerned that other nations, some of which have little domestic energy resources, will be placed in a very difficult position and that this may produce severe strains on the domestic security of this country. I am confident that your analysts have given this question considerable thought; to the extent that this analysis is useful or relevant to our own concerns, it would be most helpful if we could arrange some way of discussing these questions.

May I ask that someone in your office contact Frank Potter, the Staff Director of the Subcommittee, to discuss the kinds of information that you have and ways in which this information could be made useful to the Subcommittee.

Thank you for your assistance. I look forward to working with you in the future.

Sincerely,

 John D. Dingell
 Chairman
